‘China’s Aircraft Carriers at Sea if Submarines Attack’

Navy’s undersea detection & tracking capabilities leave high-value ships exposed: US think tank report

Beijing: China is rapidly expanding its aircraft carrier fleet to bolster its global naval presence but the massive warships may remain vulnerable to submarine attacks, according to a US think tank report.

A recent report from the Washington-based Centre for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS) outlined a “cost-imposition” strategy that could help the US and its allies threaten China’s carriers.

It included the use of land-based strike networks, long-range airstrikes supported by satellites, cyber and electromagnetic attacks and drone swarms.

However, the fifth element of the strategy—submarine ambushes—could exploit one of the Chinese navy’s key vulnerabilities, the Hong Kong-based South China Morning Post reported on Tuesday, citing the CSIS study.

Specifically, the report identified US attack submarines operating in the western Pacific as a significant threat to Chinese carrier groups, arguing that gaps in the navy’s undersea detection and tracking capabilities could leave the high-value ships exposed.

Last November, China commissioned its third aircraft carrier, the Fujian, at a ceremony attended by President Xi Jinping. The Fujian is equipped with an electromagnetic aircraft launch system (EMALS), making it the world’s second aircraft carrier to use electromagnetic catapults, after the US Navy’s USS Gerald R Ford.

China’s first carrier, the Liaoning, a refit of a Soviet-era ship, was commissioned in 2012, followed by the indigenously built Shandong in 2019. The Fujian is the largest of China’s three carriers, with a full-load displacement of more than 80,000 tonnes. Fujian-based aircraft including the J-15T, J-35 and KJ-600 have successfully completed catapult-assisted take-off and arrested landing training on the carrier, according to China’s Defence Ministry.
